Anxiety toolkit

Practical exercises our therapists teach most often. None of them replace therapy, but they can make hard moments easier.

1. Slow your breathing

Breathe in through your nose for 4 counts, hold for 4, and breathe out slowly for 6. Repeat five times. A longer exhale helps signal your body that you're safe.

2. Name the worry

Write the worry down in one sentence. Then ask: what's the most likely outcome, and what would I do if it happened? Worries often shrink once they're on paper.

3. Schedule worry time

Give yourself 15 minutes each afternoon to worry on purpose. When a worry shows up at other times, note it and save it for later.

4. Protect your sleep

- Keep the same wake-up time every day, even on weekends.
- Put screens away 30 minutes before bed.
- If you can't sleep after 20 minutes, get up and do something calm until you feel drowsy.

5. Move a little

A 10-minute walk can lower tension and clear your head. Small, regular movement helps more than occasional big workouts.

If anxiety is getting in the way of work, sleep or relationships, it’s a good time to talk to someone. Book a free 15-minute consult at (305) 555-0142.
